SureView Leads Surge in Video Monitoring Business Growth

Tampa, Florida May 21st, 2009 - SureView Systems, developer of Immix, a video centric software automation platform, has reported a surge in business as video alarm-based monitoring becomes more accepted within the marketplace.

After three years of offering Immix, SureView has witnessed major business growth as central stations start to deliver supplementary video centric services to their traditional customers, and the market for remote security services matures.

During the past 12 months SureView has acquired a number of large corporate customers as they deploy in-house automation to integrate and control their diverse security systems. These customers include E.ON, the largest energy supplier in the world and Waste Management, a fortune 500 company in the US. Major global security suppliers such as G4S and Securitas are using Immix to deliver blended technology and personnel solutions to their customers. Additionally a host of regional and local central stations throughout the US and Europe have also adopted Immix as their platform aimed at the growing opportunity for video based monitoring services in their customers base .

“Video monitoring services are being demanded by corporations and end user customers alike. As CCTV becomes prevalent, these groups are looking for ways to leverage this infrastructure. Immix allows these groups to meet this demand with a proven, enterprise class software that has the ability to scale as demand grows” said Matt Krebs, EVP of Sales for SureView Systems.

Immix delivers a single platform to manage video surveillance/CCTV, intrusion and fire alarms, access control, and VoIP audio.
